“

Being in the south and everything that has been happening in our world, I get discouraged and I feel like: “Why are we alone in this? Nobody cares about us and our children.” To be here and there are people of all colors, nationalities and races saying “We DO care,” that has brought so much joy to this whole experience. I’ve learned that because I’m a passionate parent, I have the power to make change.

There are things I want for my son. I want it for everyone. This retreat helped me to look inside myself as a person, as a fighter. My personality, my fire was asleep. Now, I'm hungry. I want to go out into the community. I want to talk to everyone, tell them we have better choices, and encourage them to come and fight with us for better education for our kids.
